THE FORCASTER: He wishes to remain anonymous.

Fifty years from now, who will be sitting in our places here. I will tell you. Let's get out the crystal ball and have a look into the future.

See that old man sitting at the head of the table? That's Mr. Bruce Klein who just had a 75th birthday so the family have gathered to celebrate.

That old lady with the silver hair.- It is his older sister Carol. I remember when she was young and beautiful with golden curls and blue eyes. She must be close to 80 now.

Those two brothers, Gary and David. In their early sixties. I believe they are in the real-estate business. David recently became a grandfather.

See that goodlooking woman who is putting on her glasses? Her name is Kathy, a sister of David and Gary. She will be 59 soon but looks much younger. I think she looks a lot like her grandmother Helen, when Helen was that age.

That young man over there. - I shouldn't say "young" because he must be 56. - His name is Darryl Mendelson. He has a younger brother Brad but I don't see Brad at the party.

Darryl is talking to that old woman next to him. Do you know who she is? It is his sister Margo. She's married and has 3 or 4 kids.

I always forget her husband's name, so don't ask me.

Margo taught school for many years then grabbed off a man.

Suppose we listen in on the conversation. - It seems that the subject refers to the good old days when some of their ancestors once sat at this very same table celebrating a 50th anniversary.

The first speaker is grandma Pam. She got married quite young and has many children and grandchildren.

She asks facetiously "Does anyone want the floor?"

The first to respond is another grandma, Debbie, age about 63.

She recalls hearing her Grandfather Otis saying to her grandma Kate these words "Although your hair has turned to silver, I love you just the same."

Now old Doc. Donald Altfeld is rising and everyone listens as he says

"Let's forget what happened way back in sixty two.

Fifty years have passed Lets drink up to, two oh one two. "
